Along with the Cambridge Firehouse (D-344) and the Post Office (D-347), the Old Cambridge High School is one of the city's most significant examples of the Georgian Revival. This style, whose popularity has lasted up until the present, has usually been reserved for those civic structures that were considered particular objects of municipal pride. In this sense, it is an entirely new style, there having been very few true Georgian buildings, particularly schoolhouses, that were constructed on this scale.
